BUSHWACKED!

JIMMY CANTRILL cradled his father's head in his arms and did his best to bite back tears. The boy was sixteen, but even at that age it's hard not to cry when your father is dying.

Old Buck Cantrill groaned weakly and peered up at his son's face.

"This — is it — son," he gasped. "I'm done — for. Take — care of your Ma — and your baby sister. You're the — man of the family — now."

"I'll get the rat that shot you in the back, Dad!" Jimmy whispered, his voice breaking.

The elder Cantrill tried to struggle upright and failed.

"No. son! Whoever bushwhacked me — would want just that. You're too young — for a gunfight. He'd kill you — then your Ma would be — thrown off the ranch. Promise me—you won't fire a gun . . ."

And Jimmy's father — backshot and robbed on his way home from the cattle market— breathed his last breath.

Even the grief caused by her husband's death didn't prevent Mrs. Cantrill from agreeing with his last words.

"Your father was right, Jimmy," she sobbed, after her son had brought the body home. "You're all I have left — you and Jane. You've got to stay home and mind the ranch — where are you going?"

Jimmy turned at the door. He had strapped on his father's six-guns, and his face a wore a suddenly mature, determined look.

"To town, Ma. To see the sheriff. You know as well as I do who bushwhacked Dad. I promised not to get into any shootin' scrapes, but that doesn't mean I'm gonna let his murderer go free!"

"But, Jimmy!" she cried, "why are you wearing guns?"

"To make sure nobody bushwhacks me!" he flung back grimly, and was gone into the night.

The town of Dry Wells wasn't big, even as Texas cowtowns go, but it boasted a bank, a Mercantile, two saloons — and the office of the county sheriff. And it was straight to the office of Sheriff MacIver that Jimmy Cantrill rode that night.

Dismounting at the hitching post outside, Jimmy became aware of sounds issuing from the sheriff's office. It was late, and he had expected to find the sheriff asleep in his room behind the office, but from the laughter he heard, apparently the sheriff was entertaining friends.

He frowned for a moment, then remembered this was the night the sheriff had a few of his cronies over for a poker game. Gudson, president of the town bank would be there, and Lait, the barber, and one other man . . .

Jimmy squared his shoulders and rapped on the door.

"Come in!" Sheriff MacIver bellowed, and Jimmy opened the door.

When his eyes became accustomed to the light, Jimmy saw that only the sheriff, Gudson and Lait were present. He stepped into the room.

"Well!" boomed Sheriff MacIver, "If it ain't Jimmy Cantrill! What can I do fer yuh this hour of the night, son? Somethin' wrong at home?"

Jimmy flipped his Stetson into a corner, shook his thatched yellow hair, and hooked his fingers over his father's gunbutts.

"Something's wrong, all right," he said shortly. "Where's Hock Bannister? Thought he always played with you folks."

Lait, the barber, stiffened and almost dropped his corncob pipe. "What would you be wantin' with Hock, Jimmy? Thought you Dad and him didn't get along."

"They didn't," Jimmy answered. "Thats what I want to see him about. Some yellow coward bushwhacked Dad this afternoon, while he was on the way

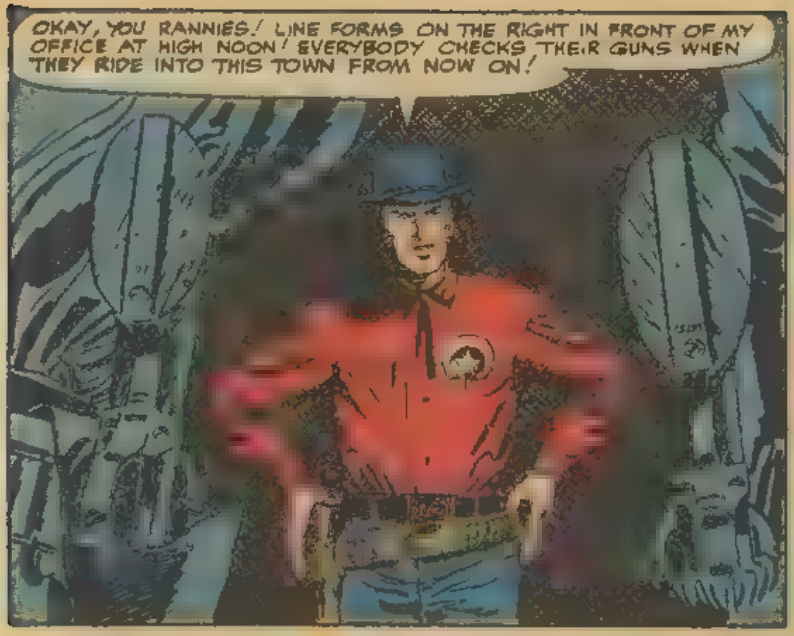
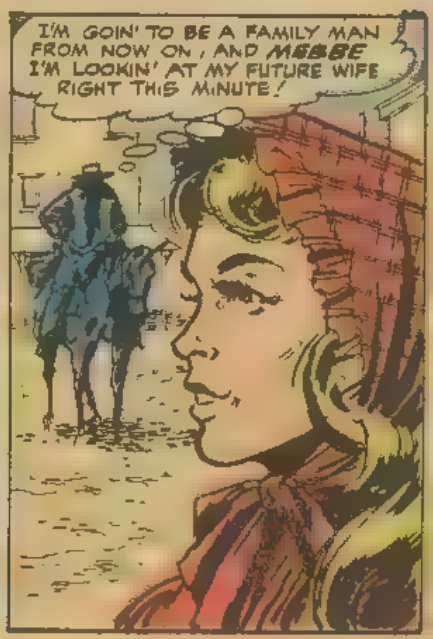
AN' I NEVER GOIN' TO BE ABLE TO SETTLE DOWN AN' HAVE A WIFE AN' KIDS OF MY OWN?
SO THAT'S THE NEW TINBADGE, EH?



OKAY, YOU RANNIES! LINE FORMS ON THE RIGHT IN FRONT OF MY OFFICE AT HIGH NOON! EVERYBODY CHECKS THEIR GUNS WHEN THEY RIDE INTO THIS TOWN FROM NOW ON!

AND ONCE AGAIN, LITERALLY WITH A SINGLE DRAW, JIM HAD THE TOUGH ONES CRAWFISHING!

BUT THREE MONTHS LATER, WITH ANOTHER WELL-DONE LAWING JOB AND FIVE HUNDRED MILES BEHIND HIM, JIM MADE A SOLEMN VOW TO HIMSELF...
NO MORE LAWMAN JOBS FOR ME! I'LL JUST NEVER WEAR MY GUNS ANY MORE...THEN THEY WON'T GET ME INTO THESE SPOTS!



JIM BENDER SURE ENOUGH WAS LOOKING AT HIS BRIDE-TO-BE, AND EXACTLY ONE YEAR LATER...
JIM HE'S ALREADY THE VERY IMAGE OF YOU!
NOW, THAT'S A FINE THING TO SAY ABOUT MY HANDSOME SON!
3.

BUT NO MATTER HOW HAPPY A MAN IS WITH HIS FAMILY AND HIS WORK, HE IS STILL ALWAYS A MEMBER OF HIS COMMUNITY...
NOW WHO COULD THAT BE, TEARIN' UP THE TRAIL LIKE THE DEVIL WAS AFTER HIM?
I HOPE NOTHING'S WRONG!
NO MAN, A GREAT POET ONCE SAID, IS AN ISLAND ONTO TSELF .. AND JIM BENDER WAS TO LEARN THE TRUE MEANING OF THOSE WISE WORDS...
ACE BLACKWELL'S WILD BUNCH IS WRECKIN' THE TOWN AND OLD SHERIFF WATKINS CAN'T STAND UP TO 'EM SINGLE-HANDED! EVERY ABLE-BODIED MAN WILL HAVE TO HELP, SO GRAB YOUR HORSE AND THE SHERIFF'LL SWEAR YOU IN, SOON'S WE GET TO TOWN!
YOU'LL HAVE TO GO, JIM!
WATKINS HAS BEEN WANTIN' TO RESIGN! HE'S TOO OLD FOR THE JOB, BUT NO OTHER MAN HEREABOUTS CAN HANDLE A GUN GOOD ENOUGH TO TAKE OVER!
AND A HALF-HOUR LATER...
YOU DON'T NEED TO DEPUTIZE NONE OF THESE OTHER RANNIES, SHERIFF!
EH?
BUT IF THE OLD LAWMAN WAS PUZZLED AT JIM'S WORDS, FIVE MINUTES LATER HE FULLY UNDERSTOOD THEM!
DO YOU SEE WHAT I SEE?
TEN MINUTES, I GIVE YOU HOMBRES TO BE TEN MILES OUT ON THE TRAIL!
AND IF MARY BENDER HAD BEEN BRAVE WHEN JIM RODE OUT, SHE HAD TO BE DOUBLY BRAVE WHEN HE RODE HOME AGAIN!
YOU SEE, MARY, I'VE ALWAYS HAD THIS HANDY WAY WITH GUNS... AND I RECKON A MAN OWES IT TO HIS FELLOW MEN TO GIVE THE BEST THAT'S IN HIM... SO I GUESS I'LL HAVE TO LEAVE RANCHIN' TO THEM THAT'S BEST WITH COWS!
YES, JIM, IF THEY NEED YOU TO BE SHERIFF, YOU MUST OF COURSE ACCEPT THE BADGE! I'LL WORRY... BUT A LAWMAN'S WIFE HAS HER DUTY TO THE COMMUNITY, TOO!

SHEEP RUN

BUZ TATON dismounted from his cayuse in front of the General Feed Exchange in Waddieville and squared his shoulders before crossing the street. He glanced once at his foreman, Biff Halliday, cocked his head to one side and said, "Well, this is the showdown Biff . . . let's get it over with!"

Biff Halliday reached out a restraining arm.

"Look, boss," he said, "take it easy. You know what Doc Latum said about gettin' your blood pressure up."

Taton bristled. He was a bull-like man, built stockily and he had a flushed, ruddy complexion, bright, keen eyes and an aggressive manner.

"You goin' back on me, too?" he demanded. "Listen, Biff, you're my foreman, and you're a cattleman, not a sheepherder! You were brought up around longhorns, weren't you, just like me? Biff, I can't stand the sight of sheep, nor of sheepherders, either! And I've stood my last grass-cuttin' from Growby!" Once more he squared his shoulders. "You comin' with me, or do I get me a new foreman?"

Biff shook his head. "Boss, I'm a human being, and those sheep people are human beings too!"

"They're profit-ruinin' careless galoots with no more idea of what they're doin' than a toad has when it gets in the shade!" Buz Taton boomed. He waited for the stagecoach to rattle by on its way toward the Ezratown road, then crossed to where Silas Growby stood talking in conversation with Doc Latum who was both a medico and veterinarian.

Growby, a small, quiet-faced man looked up as the tall shadow of Buz Taton fell across the sunlit space before him. He nodded gently.

"Hello, Mr. Taton," he said. "Anything I can do for you?"

"Anything you can do for me?" Taton almost roared. "Well, you sure can, Growby. This is cattle-country, and just because you sheepherders got a foothold in here is no reason to think you can own the range!"

"I don't think I do, Taton," Growby said quietly. "I raise sheep just as you raise cattle . . ."

"Your sheep are cuttin' all the grass roots with their hoofs!" Taton raged. "Just last night I found part of my north pasture ripped up. Didn't take much brains to realize sheep did it. And your spread borders on my north pasture!"

Doc Latum started to speak, but Growby put a hand out.

"Taton," he said, "you said this is cattle country. It isn't, any more than it's sheep country. It's also wheat country." He paused, smiling a little. "Matter of fact I heard some of your longhorns got into Ted Boaglun's wheat crop last week."

Taton colored, in great embarrassment.

"What's more," Growby went on, "my sheep did get into your north pasture, but only because your barbed-wire fence went rusty years ago and fell down!"

A purple tinge came into Taton's face. At this point Doc Latum spoke up, hurriedly.

"Buz," he said, "I'm warnin' you for the last time . . . keep your temper down, or, if you have to, take it out on a cottonwood or a tumbleweed. Watch your blood pressure! Besides . . ." The grave look disappeared from his face and he smiled broadly. "You're always makin' a big fuss about little things, Buz. Why not try takin' it easy by overlooking something big, even if it happens. Otherwise . . ." He waggled his head. "Remember what I said about your blood pressure."

Buz Taton said nothing for a moment, though it looked as though he were mentally counting to a hundred. The purple tinge in his face got deeper and then it began to fade out. Breathing heavily he glanced at Growby and growled.

"Now I'm warnin' you, Growby. I'm within my rights in demandin' that you keep a sharper eye on your sheep, busted fences or no busted fences. Trouble with you is, you've got too small a bunkhouse crew! A crew that small can't handle herds the size of yours!"

"I'm sorry to say you're right, sir," Growby said. "But my outfit started out small, though we're growing. I'm putting in more men as soon as I can."

"And, in the meantime, lettin' your boy ride herd on five hundred head!"

Growby flushed.

"He's a good boy!" the sheep rancher said. "And a smart one. And even if he's young, he wants to learn the business!"

Taton snorted.

"He won't learn it from you!" he said, annoyed. "And the next time one of your sheep herds gets onto my land and ruins the grass for my cattle feed, I'm takin' the matter to court!"

Growby said nothing, but went a little pale, then turned, bid good-bye politely to Doc Latum and walked off toward the General Feed Exchange. Doc Latum, shaking his head, muttered a farewell to Taton and departed for his office down the street.

Buz Taton stalked back to his horse, sided by Biff Halliday. Both men mounted.

"Well, that showed 'em," Buz said forcefully.

"Yes, boss, it sure did," Biff murmured.

The cattle rancher glanced sharply at his foreman.

"Well, it did!" he insisted. "Biff, you want to get a ranch of your own some day, don't you?"

Biff nodded.

"Then playin' soft won't help you keep it!" Buz said, banging his fist down on the horn of his saddle.

"Well, maybe . . ." Biff said, amiably.

"No maybes about it! I know!" his employer roared. "Let's get goin'! I got an idea we ought to keep our eyes out for Growby's kid. I saw him herdin' that five hundred head up toward the gulch between Growby's runs and our west grasslands. And if so much as one of them lambs sets a foot on our land, I'll . . ." He left the sentence unfinished as he quickly slapped reins and dashed off.

From the Ezratown road, a mile from Waddieville, Taton branched off toward the north, using a little-frequented trail that led past large patches of alkali toward the fertile, greener grounds. He kept muttering to himself. From time to time Biff Halliday glanced at his boss out of the side of his eye.

Half an hour later they came to the beginning of the gulch. Normally full of grass, it had been stripped clean by Growby's sheep. Taton's annoyance grew as they progressed up the gulch. At last, in the distance, he heard the all-too-familiar sounds of sheep, bleating up ahead. Dashing his horse up the gulch side, he rode it up a further rise and then halted.

"Look there!" he said in excitement to Biff.

Ahead lay the boundary of Growby's sheep runs and the west section of Taton's grasslands, a strip hemmed in by low, rocky cliffs to the east. A large herd of sheep was milling toward the boundary as they watched, with a mounted rider vainly trying to hold them back and turn their head again to the runs.

"What did I tell you?" Buz fumed. "That Growby kid's gettin' himself in trouble! In half a minute those sheep will break for the greener grass!"

As he spoke, the front of the herd divided sharply, and both sections broke into a frenzied run. The boy on the horse rode quickly ahead and tried to circle around them but they were too quick. An instant later the whole herd was over the boundary and spreading out, hoofs pounding on the green grass.

Buz Taton broke his horse into a gallop; he was followed almost immediately by Biff. Within a few minutes they'd caught up with the Growby boy. He sat there on his horse, a dejected boy of fifteen. Behind him his herd was smashing through the grasslands, their hoofs ripping the tender roots to pieces. The boy's lower lip trembled.

"You . . . you oughta have fixed your fences, Mr. Taton . . ." he began, and there was the hint of a tear in his eyes. "'Twasn't my fault!"

Buz Taton opened his mouth to speak. Then, suddenly, he closed it. His hand, set to strike a fist on the horn of his saddle, came quietly to rest.

"That's all right, son," he said. "Forget it. Sure it wasn't your fault. It was mine. You wait for the sheep to feed and come home."

Abruptly he wheeled and headed back for the rise, pausing at the top to look back. He couldn't avoid the sly look on Halliday's face.

"All right . . . so I'm a softie!" Buzz growled. "But I guess Doc Latum was right when he said I ought to at least try watchin' my blood pressure." His voice softened. "But there was something else, Biff. That kid was cryin'. The minute I looked at him, I saw myself, at the same age, in the same kind of trouble. Makes a man think."

Biff Halliday nodded, smiling. "'Course, the grass is ruined."

"What if it is?" Buz trumpeted. "If the grass roots are all cut, that means we don't have to do any special plowin' to put in wheat in the west lands, after the fences are fixed. What's wrong with branchin' out with a little wheat growin'?" He glanced down at the Growby boy. "Seems like I remember hearin' something somewhere about every cloud havin' a silver linin'!"
